Chase to Donate $75,000 to Help After Colorado Floods

DENVER, September 16, 2013 - JPMorgan Chase & Co. (NYSE: JPM) announced today $75,000 in donations to support relief efforts after Colorado flooding.

Chase will:

- Donate $50,000 to the Colorado chapter of the American Red Cross
- Donate $25,000 to Foothills United Way in hard-hit Boulder County
- Match personal donations by bank employees up to $1,000

"We want to help our neighbors coping with damage from this historic flood," said Todd Munson, president of JPMorgan Chase in Colorado. "We know the Red Cross and United Way can make an immediate difference for Colorado families and businesses."

In 2012, JPMorgan Chase earned the Governor's Community Service Award in Colorado and served as the Denver Business Journal's Partner in Philanthropy. In total, the company donated more than $2.7 million to Colorado charities last year. Employees volunteer thousands of hours at local charities, and plans are underway to help with flood relief.
